Rumpeltonian Minimal Excessism (2025)
Manifesto excerpt, Ralph Rumpelton

We, the Minimal Excessists, believe that too little is not enough and too much is not enough either. The perfect work exists in the space between clutter and vacuum — a visual sigh. Every line must argue with its own existence. Every color must apologize for being there.

A true Minimal Excessist knows restraint and indulgence are the same muscle flexed in opposite mirrors. MS Paint is our temple: one brushstroke too many, one pixel too few, both divine errors.

We do not edit — we reduce by adding.

Motto: “Simplicity, overcomplicated.”
